Buffalo flies are significantly worse during the warmer months but are evident all year round and they can significantly irritate cattle and impact on their overall production and welfare. Buffalo flies transmit a parasitic worm which causes serious skin lesions, especially when infestations are high. Buffalo fly can reduce beef cattle production by up to 16%.

Horses can suffer from the effects of QLD Itch, caused by an allergic reaction to the bites of Culicoides midges. These bites can result in hair loss due to itching and scratching and can cause open sores, scabs, and skin lesions due to this inflammation.
